ARMED POSSES ARE SEARCHING JERSEY PINES FOR BANDITS

Suspected As Leader, "Pretty-Boy" Floyd Is Being Sought With His Gang

GIGANTIC HUNT IS ON

Fingerprints Found On Auto In Which They Made Away With $130,000

PENNSGROVE, N. J., Feb. 3.—(INS)—The pine wilderness of Southern New Jersey today was honeycombed by armed posses of police and citizens, ordered to "shoot to kill without warning," in a monster manhunt for the four desperadoes who staged a sensational $130,000 hold-up on the threshold of the National Bank and Trust Company here.

Suspected as the leader of the gang which executed the daring robbery yesterday was Charles A. "Pretty Boy" Floyd, Oklahoma's modern counterpart of Jesse James. The hold-up was accomplished in a manner characteristic of the southwestern killer and outlaw, who less than two weeks ago was seen entering New Jersey from Pennsylvania.

Gathering momentum swiftly, the gigantic search for the robber band spread from New Jersey into four other states—New York, Delaware, Maryland and Pennsylvania.

But, after an all-night check-up of highways, sideroads, bridges, rail and bus terminals and airports in the five states produced no trace of the fugitive bandits, leaders of the hunt concentrated on the wilds of Southern New Jersey. It was believed likely that the gang, realizing how closely the main traffic arteries and populous centers were being watched, sought refuge in some abandoned shack in a remote section of the pine woods.

While four armed and roughly dressed bandits participated in the hold-up of two bank employees, a fifth man was believed to have joined the robbers about three miles east of Pennsgrove where the fleeing gang abandoned its stolen automobile and continued its flight in a delivery truck. Fingerprints found on the abandoned automobile today offered a clue to the identity of at least one of the robbers. Photographs of the fingerprints were circulated throughout the northeastern seaboard and one set of the prints were sent to Washington for examination in the crime laboratory of the department of justice.

Netting $130,000 in cash, the bold robbery was one of the biggest in the history of the nation. The money was to be used to cash pay checks of the workers in the local E. I. Dupont de Nemours company plant. It was covered by insurance.

BLACKSMITH SHOP NO LONGER WAITS FOR WORK, BUT MOUNTED ON WHEELS ROLLS UP TO BARN DOOR WHERE HORSES ARE SHOD; NO TIME LOST

"Village Smithy" Has Passed On; Method Now Much Different

IS FULLY EQUIPPED

Henry Benner Has Been Following Such Practice For Several Years

In these days of changes and times when those of mature years claim "nothing is like it used to be," it is discovered that one more institution has fallen by the wayside and now the village blacksmith shop which has been making a gradual exit since the advent of the automobile no longer stands beneath the spreading chestnut tree in Bucks County.

Instead it is now mounted on wheels and with the odor of gasoline rolls right up to the door of the barn and there the horse is shod with the least loss of time from productive activity.

The "village smithy," a once familiar figure, has passed from many communities.

Twenty-five or thirty years ago no village was considered complete unless it had its blacksmith shop, store and hotel. The stores and the hotels, it appears, have been destined to remain for some years, but the time has arrived when there are very few blacksmith shops to be found in the many villages located in various parts of the county.

However, there are a few villages in this county in which are to be found the traditional "village blacksmiths" under the spreading chestnut tree." One of these is located in Dublin borough which until a few years ago was a village.

This shop is operated by Henry Benner, a representative of the third generation to have been engaged in this line of work. His grandfather, the late Henry Benner, followed this occupation for many years and his father, the late Abraham Benner, was engaged in this work for almost forty years. The business is still continued by the younger Mr. Benner, who this week spoke briefly of the changes which have been brought about in this line of work.

It was the custom of farmers and others owning horses years ago to take their horses to the blacksmith shop to be shod. Usually it was a job for rainy days or on any other occasion when it was impossible to put the horses to work on the farms or on the roads. Then the owners of the horses took them to the shops to have them outfitted with a new pair of shoes, or if the old ones were in proper condition, to have them replaced.

According to Mr. Benner it is no longer necessary for the owners of horses to take them to the shops to be shod. The operation is reversed. The shop is taken directly to the stable.

150 HOMES REPRESENTED IN THE MOTHERS' ASS'N.

Was Organized 12 Years Ago After Seniors Asked Aid In Securing Piano

GREAT AID TO SCHOOLS

This is one of a series of articles in which an effort has been made to record the history of various organizations in this area. Some idea of that which has been accomplished by the organizations is also given and as much data is published as has been available. The information upon which the articles are based has been furnished by those still active in the organizations.

Article VII.

Approximately 150 homes are represented in the membership of the Mothers' Association of Bristol public schools, which organization will this month mark its 12th anniversary.

The idea of a Mothers' Association was conceived in a rather unique and upon an inauspicious occasion, the small group gathering to aid seniors raise funds for a piano, little dreaming their work together at that time would result in an organization of the proportions it is today.

It was in February of 1922 that mothers of the then seniors were asked by said students to help them secure funds for purchase of a piano for the high school. The mothers met at the school, consented to sponsor a supper, and were successful in their efforts. The need was thus seen for some agency that could help secure necessary items for the schools, which could not always be purchased from school funds.

A small group was banded together, and the Mothers' Association of Bristol Public Schools grew in number and likewise in strength. Today the total membership is in the neighborhood of 150 women. Serving the association as first officers 12 years ago were: Mrs. Asa Fabian, president; Mrs. James H. Brooks, vice-president; Mrs. John Moyer, secretary; and Miss Anna Schaefer, treasurer. Other women in turn gladly took up the work and aided through various offices and on numerous committees.

During the presidency of Mrs. John Hardy several years ago a membership drive was instigated with a membership of over 200 resulting. The majority of these members were secured through the drive. A number were lost however with removal of many families from the borough.

Having its membership lists open to all women over 18 years of age the association thus finds that its roster contains names of those talented in many lines, and is in this manner able to provide its own entertainment in connection with the monthly meetings, and from time to time stages shows, with the members taking part.

Serving as officers at the present time are: Mrs. Harry Pope, president; Mrs. George Croner, vice-president; secretary, Mrs. Alfred McLaughlin; treasurer, Mrs. Sylvester Brady. Mrs. McLaughlin has served in the capacity of secretary, five years.

The executive committee consists of the four officers and seven other members, one from each of the wards, one to five, inclusive, and two from the sixth ward. This group includes at present: Mrs. David Norman, Mrs. William Wright, Mrs. Maurice Roche, Mrs. John Sharp, Mrs. David Neill, Mrs. Herbert Hanson, Mrs. Joseph Whyatt.

Accomplishments of this woman's organization are numerous, but among the things it has done for the students and the school might be mentioned:

SCIENTISTS WILL MAKE EXPEDITION HERE IN SPRING

For Purpose of Seeking Remains of Race of Pre-Glacial Men

DR. COLBERT'S PLANS

Gravel Holes Will Present An Opportunity for The Preliminary Study

Scientists from the American Museum of Natural History will next Spring make an expedition to a point near this borough, for the purpose of seeking the remains of a race of pre-glacial men, who roved the eastern part of Pennsylvania 10,000 to 20,000 years ago.

It is announced by Dr. Donald Z. Cadzow, state archaeologist, that Dr. Edwin H. Colbert, assistant curator of vertebrate paleontology of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, will come to this vicinity in the Spring to undertake a search for such.

Dr. Cadzow says that it is established beyond doubt that men inhabited the region thousands of years ago.

Bits of man-made objects—stone and bone tools and arrow and spear points—have been dug up in glacial deposits. Also a human foot-bone was discovered in glacial gravel 21 feet beneath the surface of the ground.

Dr. Cadzow attaches great importance to the small bone.

"On this object rests the claim for glacial antiquity of man on the Atlantic Slope," he explained.

Paleontologists do not know what this pre-glacial creature looked like or how he lived; that is what they want to find out. They do know that he was intelligent, because the bits of his handiwork were made skillfully.

The scientists hope that the "Trenton gravels," a type of sand and stone that abounds along the New Jersey-Pennsylvania boundary, will answer some of their questions about the beings who lived during the centuries before Christ.

Excavations in other parts of the country have produced evidence that man lived on this continent before he developed in the Old World, Dr. Cadzow said.

To date, no remains of prehistoric monsters have been found on the Pennsylvania side of the line, the archaeologist said, but fossilized bones of such animals have been discovered in chalk deposits a few miles away in New Jersey.

Commercial gravel companies have been active around Bristol, and the huge holes will give scientists an opportunity to make preliminary studies of the earth's strata before they make expensive excavations.

EXPENSIVE PROVINCIALISM

When a taxpayers' group asked the Pennsylvania state treasurer why government costs so much more than the people can afford to pay he reminded it of the multiplicity of the political sub-divisions of the state. The Keystone state has 5637 such units of government, counties, townships, boroughs, school districts, school districts and cities making up that amazing total.

This shameful waste of public funds and duplication of governmental effort and expense is found in every state according to its area and population. And yet the taxpayers wonder why the government takes half of everything they earn and then cannot meet expenses.

The need for consolidation of governmental units is just as clear as the need for the curtailment and merging of state and national functions of government, and the way to that end just as beset with obstacles.

When there is no other way out the politicians and taxpayers will get together and reduce the number of governmental units by half. Human nature runs toward division rather than union. The original 13 states united under one constitution with the greatest of reluctance and the American people seem never to lose that prejudice of the founding fathers. It is even difficult to persuade the suburbanite to submit to annexation by the city in which he makes his living.

It is not difficult to understand why the politician and political organization are opposed to consolidation. Both thrive on any system which multiplies the number of public jobs. But the objection of the private citizen is largely superstition and man's natural antipathy to change in any form or shape. There are people who look upon annexation by a township, borough, city or county as a sort of subjugation by a foreign government.

If it would lead to the abolition of thousands of useless and wasteful political subdivisions, more bankruptcy in government might be a godsend.

SPEEDIER PLANES

The technicalities involved may puzzle the layman, but the fact that one of the highest aeronautical authorities in the country foresees an airplane that will make 544 miles an hour gives popular interest to his prediction.

The author of the design is John Stack, engineer at Langley field for the national advisory committee on aeronautics. "The computations," he explained, "are made for a hypothetical airplane, which, however, is not beyond the limits of possibility."

Such a plane traveling at the rate credited to it would move almost as fast as sound and would exceed the world's present speed record by more than 120 miles an hour. The estimated speed would be attainable by refinements in streamlining and the absence from the plane's surface of all projections, thus decreasing air resistance.

If an airplane making 544 miles is possible, it doesn't appear as unreasonable to believe that even greater speeds may be realizable.

Man has conquered the air but it seems evident he has by no means yet realized the full possibilities of his achievement.

People aren't profiteering. It just seems that way because any profit looks wrong when you are used to deficits.

Challenge Given In State's Reorganization

Since 1920, thirty-one amendments have been proposed to the constitution of 1874. Only 19 of these have been adopted, ten of them last year.

Schnader's forte is revamping the state government to do away with useless state bureaus and departments and simplify the archaic system of passing laws which require six legislative days.

Both officials are in accord in insisting upon consolidations in the 2,500-odd school districts in the state. Schnader felt that pleas for the $5,000,000 emergency appropriation from liquor funds to enable them to keep going should have been turned down.

"Let them suffer a while and maybe they'll be willing to listen to reason," was his philosophy.

"I TAKE THIS WOMAN"

By Allene Corliss

SYNOPSIS

After three years' travel in Europe, where she had gone following her father's death, young and beautiful Stanley Paige became bored and returned to New York to find the "something sort of sweet and important" which she felt she was missing. Stanley finds Perry Devereast, handsome young lawyer, still as much in love with her as ever, but her own heart is untouched. She longs for someone to love—someone to really belong to. Then she meets the fascinating Drew Armistage. It is love at sight. Drew's most recent heart had been sophisticated Dennis St. John. In breaking with her, he said: "You know, Dennis, you're a lot like me—you know when a thing is ended and you accept it—gracefully." Ned Wingate informs Stanley that the latter's lawyer, Charles Carleton, has been playing the market heavily and wonders if her funds are intact. Knowing that love to Stanley means marriage, Drew casually proposes. Realizing her extreme innocence, he regrets his flirtatious past. Dennis warns Stanley that love does not last and to take it lightly. However, learning that Stanley and Drew are to be married, Dennis says: "In that case, forget everything I said."

CHAPTER TEN

The next morning, Dennis called Drew at his club. "Have lunch with me, today, can you, Drew?"

"Love to! To what do I owe this unexpected pleasure?"

"Never mind that now. I'll meet you at the European Grill at one-thirty."

"Right. This is delightful, Dennis."

"Is it? I'm not so sure. Good-bye."

"Now what the devil did she mean by that?" thought Drew, hanging up. Then, because he never bothered with things that he did not understand, he forgot all about it.

That was perhaps one of the most characteristic things about Drew—his ability absolutely to put out of his mind any puzzling, disagreeable or unpleasant thought. It made life much more amusing, much more charming. It certainly made it much less confusing, much less complicated.

So Drew promptly put Dennis and her puzzling telephone conversation out of his mind, but at one-forty-five he had waited exactly fifteen minutes for her in the lobby of the European.

She came then, cool and completely unbothered. "I know—you've had to wait—but I'm sure you expected to, so you probably didn't mind."

"But I did mind—I thought as this was your suggestion you might—"

"Not at all. I'm never on time. It's not a habit, it's a principle. Nothing worth having, you know."

They laughed together, moved toward the grill room. It was not until they had found a table sufficiently cool and secluded and selected their lunch that Dennis mentioned her reason for lunching with him.

"About Stanley, Drew—just how serious are you?" She said it abruptly, blowing a faint cloud of smoke out of her eyes, leaning forward, her slim elbows resting on the table, her chin cupped in her hands.

"Really, my dear girl, allowing for a certain affectionate understanding between us, I can't see that it's any of your business."

"Whether it is or not doesn't interest me in the least. Stanley Paige does. Why not tell me about it, Drew?"

He shrugged, smiled at her suddenly. "After all, why not? I'm honestly in love with her, Dennis, some-pletely, irrevocably in love with her!"

"Well," observed Dennis coolly, "what of it? You've been in love before—you've been in love with me."

"I know, but—" Drew met her eyes frankly. "I've never wanted to marry anyone before, Dennis. I never even wanted to marry you. I've been in love scores of times but this is different."

"You mean you do want to marry Stanley?"

"Exactly."

"I see," Dennis considered her chilled consummate.

"Darn it all, Dennis, don't look so cynical. I know I've had affairs, but what of it? I know it's never lasted before but I never thought that it would. I know I'm not good enough for her and all that sort of thing but she loves me—"

"There's no doubt about that," interrupted Dennis quietly. "Any more than there's any doubt about your being in love with her. What about her money, Drew?"

"Well, what about it?"

"She has plenty, of course."

"You know it's not the money, Dennis—be decent now and don't accuse me of that!" Drew laughed quickly, looking straight into her eyes.

"No, I don't believe for a minute it is," admitted Dennis gravely. "But if she hadn't any money—what then?"

Drew became swiftly serious. "That's different, of course. I couldn't have helped falling in love with her, that had to happen once I'd set eyes on her, but I should have had the good sense to have kept out of her way."

"How utterly heroic of you!"

"Not at all—just sensible." He met her amused eyes coolly. "An affair with Stanley was bound to end in marriage. I knew that at once."

"You're an enigma, Drew. You just escape being a rotter and are perfectly charming in consequence. The nicest thing about you is your amazing honesty."

"I'm glad there's one nice thing about me."

"It's pure selfishness, of course. Anyone less selfish could never go so straight to the point, be able to see so clearly what he wanted. Stanley would never be able to understand such ruthlessness."

"I don't think I follow you, Dennis," Drew frowned slightly.

"For you are ruthless, you know," she continued solemnly. "The most ruthless person I've ever known. And Stanley is so utterly defenseless, Drew. You do realize that, don't you?"

"I don't know that I do, Dennis. You're talking an awful lot of rot. I know I'm not so much but at that I'm not so very bad. I intend to marry her. I think I can make her happy—I'm most certainly going to try."

Looking at him just then Dennis found it hard not to believe him. She said so impulsively. "I almost think you will, Drew! Forgive me for ragging you and thanks a lot for lunching with me."

The third week in June plunged the city into a terrific wave of heat. Even Alita Lawson's Park Avenue apartment was stifling hot. But Stanley went serenely on, cool and fragrant and lovely, utterly oblivious to it, completely isolated in her love for Drew.

She bought clothes extravagantly, wanting desperately to look her loveliest for this beloved stranger. She filled the apartment with flowers and liked the afternoons it rained and they stayed in and had tea alone in the long, dim drawing room.

Ellen went about stolidly, running the house, taking exquisite care of Stanley, but as the days slid into weeks she smiled less and less and a worried little line appeared between her bright blue eyes; and it was indicative of Stanley's detached mood that she noticed nothing unusual in the familiar dear-ness that was Ellen.

September had come to seem an intolerably long time away. If Drew had suggested it, she would have married him immediately. But he didn't suggest it.

Drew, naturally intuitive about such things, realized that a certain term of apprenticeship to love was not only desirable but necessary. He was utterly in love with Stanley. He was terrifically anxious to possess her. But not too precipitately. In the meantime he was finding it wholly pleasant and emotionally satisfying to be engaged to her. She was beautiful to look at, completely responsive to him, utterly without experience. Drew, who had never been patient where love was concerned, was finding it ridiculously easy to be patient now. He could afford to be.

Then something happened overnight, which proved that he had not only been patient but wise.

Charles Carleton suffered a complete financial debacle and shot himself in his office on Wall Street.

He left Stanley a brief little note—pathetic in its futility. "It doesn't matter about me but I can never forgive myself for having done this to you. Try to think kindly of me if you can."

Stanley had just finished breakfast when Ned Wingate brought her the message. He liked Stanley immensely and wished someone other than himself had been the one to tell her.

She came in to him immediately, wearing slim silk lounging pajamas, her hair still damp and curly from her shower. She sensed something wrong at once. "What's the matter, Ned? You look ragged. Anything wrong?"

"Everything's wrong. It's Carleton. Stan. I was right—he was in a bad way. He—shot himself this morning." He handed her the letter. He felt he had done it very badly, indeed. Wished that Marcella had been there to help him out.

Stanley read the few lines swiftly. When she lifted her eyes, they were brimming with tears. "What does it mean, Ned—that he lost my money?"

Wingate nodded. "A clean smash, Stanley. Everything's gone."

She sat down slowly. Stared at him with wide, horror-stricken eyes. "And he killed himself because of that—what a pity, Ned—what a rotten pity!"

"I know—but he couldn't stick it."

"But the money doesn't matter—and I liked him, Ned. He was always so good to me."

"I know." Ned looked awfully miserably. It was like Stanley to think of Carleton and not of her own loss. But he had to make her realize it some way. He said: "This is going to mess things up for you, Stan. We haven't had a chance to go into things thoroughly of course, but it looks pretty bad. I don't believe we'll be able to save anything. You see, he made a last desperate attempt to retrieve and they caught him—smashed him."

"I see," Stanley nodded slowly. She really didn't grasp it at all. She was seeing Charles Carleton and her father smoking cigars in the library of the house on Gramercy Park. She was seeing a funny little wooden duck that he had given her one Christmas. She was remembering how she had struck Ellen in the face with it in a fit of temper. She was thinking that life could be very cruel and very sweet. She was thinking of Drew and that beside him nothing mattered very much.

What is a G. P. A. to do?

BIG BUSINESS has its laboratories and its bureau of standards where products submitted to General Purchasing Agents may be tested searchingly. But Big Business has not all the intelligent G. P. A.'s, nor has it any monopoly on big purchases.

The women of this country make eighty-five per cent of all retail purchases—and they influence the rest. They are G. P. A.'s for 25 million independent businesses, the households of America. Without charts, graphs, or laboratories, how are they to buy efficiently? How are they to be sure of securing honest, wholesome products for use by their families?

Their guide is advertising in the daily paper. They realize, sensibly enough, that the merchants of their town talk to them truthfully in advertisements. They watch these pages for news of advantageous purchases. They welcome the new or better product when informed of it through advertising.

The merchants and manufacturers who use this newspaper realize that your patronage, not only this year but next, is the life of their businesses. They test and criticize and study merchandise more rigorously than you ever could. You may read their advertisements with confidence. Guided by them, you may buy efficiently!

Any one can spend money — the reader of advertisements spends wisely

SCORE OF 28-13 SPELLS DEFEAT FOR BRISTOL V.

By Jack Orr

Last evening on the local high school court before 1,000 basketball enthusiasts, the Morrisville "Bulldogs" took undisputed possession of first place as they trounced the Bristol High "Strangers" to the tune of 28-13.

This virtually gives Morrisville the crown, as Bristol will have to win their remaining three league games, while Morrisville loses theirs, for the Red and Gray to repeat as last year's champs.

Bristol started with a bang. Captain Fry, Spencer and Rue made field goals in quick succession. Rue converted his foul. Bristol, 7; Morrisville, 0. It looked good for the "Strangers."

On a double foul, Fry counted his, as Mattie was unsuccessful. Byrne of Morrisville sunk the gift shot. Kleinfelder made a spectacular shot as the period ended.

In the second quarter Malmesbury put away a long shot. Rue retaliated. Again Kleinfelder made the same shot. Spencer's foul was good. Kleinfelder also sunk the free shot as the half ended. Morrisville High, 9; Bristol High, 11.

As the third period opened, Malmesbury easily sank a "sleeper." Mattie put the Blue and Gold ahead with a twin pointer. Mattie followed with another and then converted his foul. Huffnel sank a two-pointer for Bristol's only score this half. Mattie again put one in as the third canto ended.

The final period was all Morrisville's as Bristol did not hit the cords. Captain "Moose" Fry and "Jimmy" Rue were put out on fouls and received a great hand as they left. Final score, Bristol 13, Morrisville 28.

Bristol was weakened tremendously through the absence of "Unk" Gallagher who was ill last night and did not play.

Captain Fry was high man for the Red and Gray with five points, while Kleinfelder led the Bulldogs with five twin pointers and one conversion.

The "gym" team did its stuff on the flyings rings at half time, and received a grand ovation.

Blacksmith Shop No Longer Waits for Work; Goes To It

bles, where the blacksmith performs the work just as well as if he were doing it in his own shop.

Mr. Benner explains this week that whenever he receives a call from a farmer to have a horse shod he jumps into his especially equipped truck and motors to the place to which he is called and performs the task. Included in the equipment are a forge, anvil, hammers, nails and files and all other accessories required in the shoeing of a horse.

Farmers these days, said Mr. Benner, often do not like to spare the time to take their horses to the blacksmith, where years ago they often were compelled to wait their turns for hours before the busy smithy could give attention to the horse. It was also pointed out by Mr. Benner that farmers prefer not to take their horses through congested traffic, especially through towns.

It was several years ago that Mr. Benner conceived the idea of bringing the blacksmith to the horse instead of bringing the horse to the blacksmith, and he has been following this practice since that time. A slight additional charge is made when the blacksmith is called to the farm to shoe a horse.

Mr. Benner was unable to state how many horses he shoes in one month, but he said that the period from October until the forepart of March is rather dull. On the other hand, he said, he has found the business to be quite brisk during March and April and June and July.

Blacksmiths years ago in addition to placing the shoes on the horses, had to make the shoes, but this no longer is the case. He buys a set of shoes takes them to the shop and there he toes and calks them before placing them on the horses.

Asked whether he ever was called upon to shoe horses of a fractious nature, Mr. Benner replied in the affirmative adding, "It goes with the business." Some years ago the blacksmiths put into use a contrivance which compelled the horses to stand still but some objections on the ground of cruelty have arisen and it is not generally used now. Mr. Benner said he never had occasion to use such a contrivance.

The blacksmith in the past did not devote his entire time to the shoeing of horses, but farmers called upon him to place fellos on wheels or to put new rims or spokes on them. Mr. Benner stated that very little of this is done any more. However, the blacksmith usually is kept busy in doing general repair work.

During the conversation with Mr. Benner it was revealed that he is not the only blacksmith to take his smithy to the premises of farmers. It is done by Norman Troxel, of Kulpville; Hobart Bergey, Lansdale, and Mr. Curtis, Coatesville.

It was learned during the conversation that during the past 10 or 12 years many blacksmith shops have been abandoned. One of these which actually was located under the spreading boughs of large chestnut trees is located at the intersection of the Applebutter and Street roads on the property of Harvey M. Wismer, Plumstead township. For many years this smithy was conducted by the veteran, James F. Jones, who at present is a guest at the Odd Fellows' Home at Middletown.

With the recent death of Allen Steever, who was killed by a hit-and-run motorist several weeks ago the blacksmith shop at Weisel has been left vacant.

Thousands of horses were shod in the past at the blacksmith shop connected with the Aaron Kratz wagon works in the village of Plumsteadville. Some years ago these shops were torn to the ground and practically nothing remains of them. The late George Brooks was in charge of the blacksmith shop connected with the wagon works. The late John Smith also conducted a shop in Plumsteadville. This village, however, continues to have a shop which is in charge of Howard R. Kramer.

The shop which for years had been operated in Danboro by William Deemer and Clarence Loux has been closed some time as has been also the one which had been operated at Blooming Glen by Edward Fretz.

Lewis Rufe is still plying his trade at Pipersville and David Trauger, another veteran at this business, is still at his old stand in the village of Bedminster.

They Have Everything, But—

By BURNLEY

ONE of golf's strangest riddles is the inability of Macdonald Smith to win a major golf crown. The grand old Carnoustie stylist is generally conceded to have the most perfect golfing form of 'em all, yet all in vain he has been seeking one of the big golf titles for more than two decades.

Several times this master of golf rhythm has just missed winning one of the big open crowns, losing out by heartbreaking margins. Once he finished in a deadlock for first place with his brother Alex in the British Open, only to lose out in the play-off.

Mac is one of the marvels of the sports world, in spite of his inability to shake off this jinx that haunts him in major title play. At the age of forty-two, after more than twenty years of top flight competitive golf, the Carnoustie master is still one of the highest-rated pros in the land.

Smith usually shows his real class in some of the big money tournaments of the winter circuit. Mac has a truly uncanny string of victories in the annual Los Angeles Open tourneys—he has won that rich event four times since its inception about a decade ago. Recently he spreadeagled a great field in the 1934 edition of the L. A. tourney, chalking up a brilliant 280 for the route.

Another unusual case is exemplified in Joe Kirkwood's inability to win major golf honors. This trick shot master can do everything with golf clubs but make them talk, yet his phenomenal skill and dexterity have failed to bring him to the top in the big tournaments.

Both Kirkwood and "Old Man Rhythm" Smith will be shooting for the golden simoleons of Agua Caliente when that famous Mexican journey gets under way this weekend.
